

ACHU Prince-will Achu

Age: 19

Nationality: Cameroon

Email: princewillachu65@yahoo.com

The ocean a future

The ocean a refuge for creation, a beauty. makes me wonder every time who designed such a perfect architecture, with every piece fitting perfectly together. The ocean is place people once seen as indestructible, but that is changing. Nature is turning its back on the same people it used to protect. climate change is slowly making the ocean inhabitable for the creatures it harbors and on top of that, man himself what if there was a way out. The ocean plays a great role in the wellbeing of our planet so, the ocean is our future; the ocean is a savior from earths doom and that's if we see it as a way out. how healthy our ocean is directly relates to how healthy our Planet will be. Let me tell you a story about the Phillipine island their love for the ocean. It's a sad one.

The economy of the Phillipine island largely dependent on the ocean. In other words, they eat from the ocean. Once men will go out fishing and come back with enough fish than they can carry but that has changed men will go out for hours, days n will barely even see a fish. This makes me ask the question what happened. There was enough fish before technology came and increased fishing output for big fishing companies. We can literally say the ate all the food and forgot to keep what they had to eat the next day. We get waste pilling up on the beaches, pollution. All these have made the ocean hell for creature who once saw it as heaven. Some die, some just go looking a better place.

Did I tell you the people of this island also harvest sea vegetation which they sell or eat, that is now changing. With the emission of chemicals by factories that end up the ocean, it is becoming acidified. Vegetation that have grown for hundreds of years giving the ocean floor a beautiful view and when harvested serves as food for the Philippines now dies away with matter of hours. Now a people who were once friends with the ocean relaying on it for food and depending on it for economic growth are now becoming a poor and hungry people and diving into and economic depression

Did the ocean turn its back on them? The answer is no. the ocean is polluted because man once thought the ocean was too big and could contain as much waste as the planet produces. The ocean is now saturated with chemicals and non-biodegradable waste killing sea creatures which produces oxygen that can reverse amount of carbon dioxide man himself has chocked his planet in.

To conclude I will like to say the planet is heading toward a disaster man himself caused and healing our sick ocean is healing our planets future. Removing the non-biodegradable waste that has infested the surface of the ocean and DE acidifying the ocean will save our future. Our the future of the ocean is our future too if we heal the ocean we heal our future too.